NAMED A MASSACHUSETTS HONOR BOOK IN POETRY FOR 2005
BY THE MASSACHUSETTS CENTER FOR THE BOOK

“Ezra Pound and T. S. Eliot revived that tradition, putting bits of translation into their poems. . . . In his new book Goodbye to the Orchard, Steven Cramer makes a memorable American poem from the shape and general contents of ‘Deor,’ an enigmatic Anglo-Saxon lyric, about time abolishing all suffering. . . .”

—Robert Pinsky, Washington Post

—Publishers Weekly

—Harvard Review

“Cramer actually grew up in an uncultivated apple orchard, full of inedible fruit that even the insects eschewed. That proximity to paradise, paradoxical as it is, lends his poems a bittersweet longing, a sweet kind of sadness.”

—Frederick Smock, The Courier-Journal
